

Texting for babies' health

thestate.com

Published July 6, 2010

Texting for babies' health

Pregnant women can get daily text messages with health information tailored to the due date of their baby through the text4baby program.

The mobile phone information service is designed to promote the health of pregnant women and their babies, according to Select Health of South Carolina, an outreach partner for the national program. To sign up for text4baby service, pregnant women should text BABY to 511411.

Text4baby messages will also help connect women to prenatal and infant care services and resources in their area.